

A GREAT ACT.

Yesterday by the mere pressure of a small button, President Cleveland started thousands of tons of machinery in motion, and by this slight act of his the World's Fair at Chicago, the greatest exhibition of nature's work and man's thrift and industry, ever known in the history of the world, was begun.

Never in all Cleveland's career as a citizen and statesman has he performed an act of such moment; a mere pressure of the finger, the results of which have been eagerly watched for by the entire civilized world.

What would not a man give to have taken the place of Cleveland at that moment?

The dispatches of Wednesday had notice of the failure or embarrassment of seven great commercial concerns, which ranged all the way from a coal company to a jeweler. The men who handle finances ought to keep watch of these things. By and by, when the pressure gets a little stronger, unless some relief shall come, there will be general smashing clear across the continent. Those wise bankers in the East who are alarmed about gold going across the sea, ought to remember that only 3 per cent of this country's business is done in foreign lands or with foreign individuals or corporations, and that 97 per cent is confined to the domestic trade of our country. In keeping that in mind, they ought to sometimes think how their foreign 3 per cent will come out if the 97 per cent of home trade shall be smashed. These are days when money-changers every one of them, ought to wear very big hats and have heads to fill them.—Salt Lake Tribune.

Edison's incandescent lamp is not new. Henry Goepel, a native of Hanover, Germany, now 74 years old and a pauper inmate of the German Masonic Home at Tappan, N. Y., claims to have invented the incandescent lamp. He began his experiments soon after coming to this country in 1848. He describes in detail his experiments and failures, how he tried different kinds of metal, wire and, at last, carbon, and succeeded so well with an arc light on the top of his house as to call out the fire department. Yet he had not the business capacity to patent his invention and bring it to practical use.—Star.

Dwyer, the San Francisco statesman, who recently went to Washington to interview the President, and notify him that he would have no serious objections to being appointed minister to Japan, has returned and announced his intention of retiring from politics. If we had received one-tenth the "guying" he has through the newspapers, we would feel like retiring also.—Livermore Herald.

The lack of American dread of any foreign force was exhibited yesterday in New York, when marines from all the warships in that harbor paraded the streets playing their national airs and flying their national colors. The spectacle must have been an imposing one, for the crews of all these ships are made up of picked men and each nation made its best appearance.

A New York man claims that he has invented a new motor that will propel the big vessels across the Atlantic in three days and a half. His power is to be furnished by common sugar and potash, and he claims that the invention is complete and not an experiment.

Confound Foster! May the foul fiend of the nether regions nail him to a brass cloud. He is now working up another storm, which he declares will be worse than anything that has struck us this winter.—Lundy Index.

A Queer Wager.

An American acrobat in Vienna won a queer wager recently. He bet a considerable sum with a Vienna strong man that he could not endure to have a liter of water fall drop by drop from the height of three feet upon his head. When 300 drops had fallen the athlete's face became red, and he looked as if in pain. At the 420th drop he gave up, saying it was impossible to bear the pain any longer. The palm of his hand was swollen and inflamed, and in one place the skin had been broken open. Only a small portion of the water had gone to make up the 420 drops.
